Heretofore, one of the arguments of the advocates of a protective tariff was that it so encouraged the building of manufactories at home that compitition would keep down the prices. Now that combination has taken the place of competition at home, and the protective tariff prevents competition from abroad, the great mass of the poople are at the mercy of these gigantic trusts. Afte the manufacture of all our goods is under the control of these gigantic moneyed corporations, is there not danger that the manufacture of our laws will be controlled by the same combinations. The danger is really greater than we have ever dreamed
